THE RSPB CORNCRAKE SURVEY HAS STARTED!

Corncrakes on the Isle of Skye – RSPB Scotland Annual Corncrake Survey 2023

The Corncrake season of 2023 is officially OPEN so please let us know if you see or hear one

One of our rarest summer visitors, the corncrake, is back on the Isle of Skye. The unmistakable ‘Crex Crex’ call is the male corncrake looking for a mate, but as they prefer to stay hidden in tall vegetation you may only hear him rather than ever see him! We are just emerging from winter here, and things have just started to grow, so Corncrakes struggle to find places to hide and often you’ll hear them calling from a nettle patch, the edge of a reed bed or some other margin where the vegetation is tall enough for them to hide in. They are birds of agriculture so you’re most likely to find them in crofting areas and farmland as they nest on in silage and hay meadows.

We received our first 2023 report of a Corncake on the Isle of Skye on 20th April this year, which is 10 days earlier than last year but not out with the normal range. This signals the start of the summer survey and if you hear or see a corncrake, we would love to hear from you!

Please get in touch and let us know when and where you heard it. If you manage to get a recording on your phone, all the better.

Contact Shelagh Parlane on 07771 545409 if you hear a corncrake.
